General Classification of Rental Car Services

There are many different car rental agencies that offer different types of cars. Classification of cars are not constant between companies and they may vary from the rental agency themselves; example: your personal car manufacturer can classify a model as a medium, while a car rental agency may classify the same model as a full size, so if you are new to the rental car always seek clarification.

Most rental car companies are updating their rental fleets regularly; their fleets' rental models may vary. All cars are classified by 'Group' not by individual model types.

In other countries, particularly the Europe manual transmission is standard. Air conditioning and automatic transmission models are generally available, but only in larger and higher priced vehicles.
